WEST WASHINGTON AFFAIRS An Interesting Budget of Local Mat-

It is difficult to state whether the appre Thursday night was more delighted than astonished. A good concert was expected by many who had listened to the rehearsals, but when the orchestra took their places on the stage, most of the audience were surprised at the number, and when the first piece on the programme was rendered, the surprise was increased.

surprise was increased.

If The orchestra seemed to have none of the peculiar features of an amateur entertainment, but each part of the programme was rendered with the expression and effect of old performers who had been long sociated together.

Prof. Bernays, as conductor, seemed to have his orchestra well in hand, and from beginning to end not a false movement could be detected. He has certainly shown himself to be perfect in the difficult task of organizing and training an orchestra.

The programme was varied. The severely-critical among the audience were delighted with the symphony of Haydn, while the less-cultivated car was enthusiastic over the lighter pieces.

An encore was frequently demanded, and was given in the sprightly "Turco-Russian March." A Noctarne of Kreuzfeldt, per-

Was given in the sprigately Turo-Russell March." A Nocturne of Kreuzfeldt, performed by Mr. H. Rakeman, was enthusiastically received and an encore called for. It was exquisitely rendered, not only in the solo, but also in the orchestral accompaniment.

Space will not permit us to give in detail all which is worthy of special mention, and we can only say that the Amateur Orchestra of Georgetown has in its debut established a name for itself which should place it at the head of musical organizations. The people of the West End have a right to feel proud of it.

KEEPING WARM.

Some Scientific Facts and Principles Plainly Stated.

American Agriculturist.

That sheltering all animals from cold weather, from chilling winds which by their rapid motion carry off heat more rapidly, is the way to save food and to save waste of flesh. If by stopping this waste of heat from the surface all the food consumed will not be wanted to make heat; a portion of it can go to increasing the flesh, that is to producing growth, or more can be used in making milk, eggs, etc., within the animal. Dyspeptic persons, those having feeble digestion, or a poor appetite, get less internal heat from food combustion and suffer from cold. Such persons need a warmer atmosphere, or warmer dwellings, and warmer clothing to retain the heat that is produced. This applies to all animals.

Close-fitting garments, garters, lacing, boots, shoes neckties, etc., that prevent free, casy circulation of the blood, each and all diminish the amount of heat produced and its uniform distribution. Exercise promotes more rapid circulation of the blood and increased heat production.

Rubbing wet horses and other animals dry is very useful, not only to save heat, but also to save cold taking, as explained in our last number. For the same reason any damp garment should be replaced with dry ones as soon as possible, or enough covering be added to prevent chilliness from the evaporation.

Free perspiration (sweating) in hot weather carries off a large amount of heat.

cring be added to prevent chilliness from the evaporation.

Free perspiration (sweating) in hot weather carries off a large amount of heat, and keeps down the temperature. If perspiration be checked, sponging with water alds in cases of sunstroke or depression from heat. Persons have gone into hot ovens unharmed by encasing themselves in moistened garments, the evaporation keeping down the heat about the body. Green wood, besides its inconvenience, is very unprofitable. A large amount of heat which the dry portions would yield is lost by being carried off in the evaporation of the sap. So of any wet or damp fuel of any kind.

As confined air is a poor conductor of

As confined air is a poor conductor of heat, all fabries that are porous, that is full of little interstices, tubes or holes filled with air, are the best protectors to keep heat from escaping from the surface of the body. A loosely woven garment or bed coverlid is warmer than a compact, firmly woven one, because the air in the texture of the former conducts away heat less rapidly than the more solid ones. Loose-fitting garments are warmer than elose-fitting ones, for reasons above given, and also because the air space between them and the skin is a non-conductor of heat. As confined air is a poor conductor of heat.

Stone, brick or wooden walls, with perpendicular air spaces in them, are warmer than solid walls, because the air conducts the heat away less than the solid materials. A sheathing of tarred paper, or pasteboard, or of any thick paper even, placed midway between the clap-boarding and the plastering, to form twe thin air-chambers instead of one, adds greatly to the warmth of a house or other building. Two half-inch boards, set a little apart to leave an air space between make a far yarmer house wall than the same thickness of wood in juch boards.
